Sonic Fielding is a research project by Lorea Burge that looks at the body in movement and in contact/friction with the space and objects as instruments for creating music.

Throughout my artistic residence I created a playground/laboratory for experimentation. Artists in the fields of sculpture, installation, noise, movement and costume were invited into the studio to work and see how our practices could meet, using sound as the protagonist and glue for each encounter. Contributing artists were Maider Aldasoro, Leire Lacunza, Bobby Brim, Nazario Diaz, Oihana Vesga, Leo Burge and Myriam Petralanda (RZM).

The residency was designed as a public process, allowing audiences to peep into a creative process and making the process itself the product and performance.

To culminate the residency I created an installation/exhibition and performance of leftovers, documentation, and sonic interpretations from the 'playground'.

Join me in the playground.

What does your process sound like?

An EP of songs for each artist that joined me in the studio to work. Each encounter was recorded, to pick up the sounds of their hand and labour. Then edited to create a sonic interpretation of each of their practices.
